1. Why Does Ryan Hate Mondays?

- <https://lr.doesbook.kr/en/>
- Design: The design is very simple and straightforward, it's playful and very easy on the eyes even though there seems to be a lot of information
- Usability: It is very easy to navigate, instructions are clearly indicated and simple to follow. The arrows indicating the direction the character should go in go out of the screen and are sometimes confusing, though.
- Content: The content is adorable and tell a little story about a beloved Korean character, Ryan, as well as be filled with easter eggs and fun little bits of information about him.
- Creativity: The contrast of putting 3D models and assets telling a story in an otherwise 2D "doodle notebook" environment is very interesting and refreshing!

2. Frontend Hashira

- <https://jobenetuk.dev/>
- Design: Simple, modern, and dark with a splash of color is a very nice way of making a site that only contains information about an individual inviting and fun to interact with
- Usability: All the content is delivered to the user from the beginning and is easy to understand; to begin navigation, scroll, and to navigate information, all clickable links are obvious and inviting
- Content: The content itself is somewhat boring, in my opinion, as it is just someone's portfolio
- Creativity: This person has found a way to bring interest and to make people want to interact with the content with a creative and inviting design, with the splash of color/spotlight following the mouse on a dark background and somewhat lifeless/colorless images is very fun

3. Orb Space

- <https://www.orb-space.com/>
- Design: Very simple and modern, but the infinite scrollbar that loops back to the beginning once it reaches the end is somewhat annoying in that users may not be certain that they're done unless they notice the small progression bar at the bottom that is partially hidden, it's also not straightforward that that's what that number is
- Usability: the home page is very simple to use and navigate otherwise, straightforward and no extra steps to accomplish the main objectives which is to explore the various venues
- Content: The content is interesting, and the pictures featured are inviting to explore more although it is more photography than design, it's important to have content and a design that compliment each other and I think that's been achieved here
- Creativity: This websites has features I've never seen before, and although creative and quite unique, is a little off putting, the diagonal and random scrolling on the venue pages made me very uncomfortable and threw me off balance and I became confused with all the content feeling scattered that way
